FOREWORD

One of the subjects being considered for interpretation by museum methods at the Jefferson National Expansion Memorial in St. Louis is the story of the American fur trade. Emphasis would be placed on the important influence of this trade on our national expansion.

This story is one of great complexity. No comprehensive study of the fur trade has been published, nor has an adequate bibliography been compiled. As an aid to the further study of the subject and to the later interpretation of the story in terms of museum exhibits, it was felt that such a bibliography would be of primary importance.

In compiling this list of published works on the American fur trade the standard bibliographies on the literature of American history and the card catalog of the Library of Congress, as well as the Union Catalog, were first consulted. Publications classified under "fur trade" were noted. Then the survey was extended to include works on closely related subjects which would contribute to an understanding of the many aspects of the story.

The great bulk of published material on the fur trade, the fact that valuable references on the subject are often found in publications apparently having no bearing on it, and the constant stream of new material make difficult, if not impossible, a really exhaustive compilation. The present list of titles must therefore be considered as a preliminary one. It is hoped, however, that it will not only serve its immediate purpose but also be of assistance to all those interested in the field. Suggestions of additional material will be welcomed.
